WRITING

Write a story about an interesting encounter with a stranger (or invent one) (140–180 words). Answer the questions.

It was my first day as an undergraduate student in my college when I was with my own friends' group who were with me since my high school days. All classes were an introductory class where we introduce ourselves to the class and so by others as well. After few classes, we had a lunch break where we headed towards the canteen and there, I noticed a girl eating her lunch alone. Since I was enjoying with my friends' circle, I didn't care much.

After we had lunch, we found out that the teacher of next class was absent. So, we headed toward the garden of the college and one girl came near me and asked if she can sit with me for a while and I let her be there. I was quite in a shock when she came to me where I was talking with my group and just sat by next to me and was just talking to me. Taking that note, I thought she is not comfortable talking to others in my group. So, to make her comfortable, as it was just a matter of few minutes, I started talking to her taking a break from my group. And after few minutes our next class started which was a practical class of computer. All the students were divided into groups by the teacher and there I had to make a group with the new girl I just had a conversation with. From that day, we became a project partner and later after graduation we worked in a same company and now, we two have our own company with the same mindset and common goal we shared.
